Direct Approach. When you use the direct approach, the main idea (such as a recommendation, conclusion, or request) comes in the "top" of the document, followed by the evidence. This is a deductive argument. This approach is used when your audience will be neutral or positive about your message. In the formal report, the direct approach usually mandates that you lead off with a summary of your key findings, conclusions, and recommendations.

The direct approach also saves you time and effort. No one wants to have to pretend like they're in the CIA to get laid. The indirect strategy takes a lot of thinking, performing, and incongruent behavior. Most guys don't have the acting chops to pull something like that off, and a lot of the time the interaction starts feeling very contrived.
