There are eight million foreigners living in the UK. There are an estimated eight million people who were born abroad living in the UK, although according to the census that was already the case in 2011. Tomorrow's release of statistics on migration is front page news today, but the Telegraph's splash oversimplifies a little. The Office for National Statistics (ONS) is expected to announce on 27 August that the number of foreign-born people in the UK has hit eight million, but that's not the ...
